This kind of segregation was finally undone at a Greenwich Village basement lounge called Cafe Society—a play on the upscale nightclubs for snobbish elites popular in the 1930s. The club, at One Sheridan Square (right), was the creation of a former shoe salesman with leftist leanings named Barney Josephson.

3. Lighting. A good lighting design is the cynosure of any brilliant design, but its significance increases two-fold when designing specifically for eateries. The lighting design for such spaces is much more nuanced than the general lighting of any commercial or residential interiors. It creates an unconsciously positive mood and stimulates the appetite for the customers.
